Donor support helped Carolann keep food on the table.

Carolann Harris was 42, with two college degrees and a full career behind her, when a workplace injury changed everything. She can no longer stand for long periods, manage many physical tasks, or safely do things like laundry, cooking or stairs on her own.

Her husband, a kidney transplant recipient, one of her own kidneys among them, added another layer of medical complexity the family hadn't planned for.

With mounting medical needs and mounting bills, Carolann and her family found themselves just weeks away from homelessness. She called PEDVAC Foundation, a local agency funded by United Way, in tears, unsure how she would put supper on the table that night.

"When the funding runs out, we go hungry. We do without. My daughter goes to school with no lunch," said Carolann. "This place is imperative to our community."

Thanks to donations through United Way, PEDVAC Foundation is able to provide the everyday staples families need, from breakfasts and lunches for kids before school to food access for parents and seniors alike.
